

Word Formation Gap Fill

Over the past week we've been students into our	ENROL summer semester for the Virtually Fluent Academy and one of the most popular reasons people are enrolling is to their English for travel. I have to say I was very	IMPROVEMENT surprised to hear people taking the language so seriously for travelling. Do you think it's to learn a language	NEED before travelling to a country?
Pointing at things and out sentences can be a	ACTION great way to communicate if you don't have a common language with someone but this can only get you so far! Similarly, Google Translate and the of new language translation	VARY apps can also help you string sentences together but you can end up saying something completely different (TOP TIP- don't always trust Google Translate!)
It's true that millions of people around the world	SPEECH at least the basics of the English language. It is a vital language for travel being found at the airport, on public transport signs around cosmopolitan cities, at hotel reception desks and at most tourist I understand the necessity of English for	ATTRACT travel and I feel lucky to have this as my native	BELIEF

language.

Native English speakers are often stereotyped as being pretty lazy when it comes to learning foreign languages and, on the most part, this is true. Knowing that the majority	PROBABILITY of holiday destinations will allow you to perfectly	COMMUNICATE well in English means native speakers have become frustratingly lazy.
But what if you travel to a remote area of a country that doesn't speak a word of English? How would you communicate with these people? Would you and should you learn their native language? Even if it's just for a few days?
I'm a very keen I have studied French since I was	LANGUAGE
4 years old, started German when I was 13 and added Spanish to my list when I was 21 years old. I feel relatively confident speaking in these languages when I go on holiday and, despite making mistakes, I always try to speak the	NUMBER language of the country I'm visiting. I always tell my students to not be to make mistakes and use travel as a free	FEAR opportunity to speak – I have to practise what I preach! It's such a good feeling after all those years of grammar and vocabulary practice when you can hold a basic conversation in the target language.
However, I'm always at how many times I order	SURPRISE something in a restaurant in French, Spanish or German and the waiter in English! Is my speaking really that bad?	RESPONSE
Or do they simply want to save you the trouble and that's why they "do you the" of speaking in English.	FAVOURITE

I love going sightseeing and taking short city and I	BROKEN always try to learn the basic phrases in the language "please", "thank you", "I'd like" "can we get the bill?" I'm also one of those annoying people who asks native speakers, such as receptionists at the hotel or waiters in bars how to say phrases in their language. I think it's really to respect the	IMPORTANCE culture and the language of the place you're visiting and try to speak their language, plus learning a language keeps the brain
! But many think it's a waste of time learning basic	ACTIVITY phrases for a short weekend and the of people	MAJOR speak the basics of English anyway.
